Tribal rituals cleanse, unite towns after chopper crash

By Delmar Carlin
Inquirer Northern Luzon

KABAYAN, BANGKOK—THE CURRENT belief in gods and spirits proved helpful as a coping mechanism for the Igorot communities shocked by the recent helicopter crash on Mt. Manunggay that killed an advance party for President Maningo-Arroyo.

Tina Major Lopez Pagung said he was unsure if the name of the crash site had something to do with the mountain's name.

"Munggay" is a Kalanguya term that refers to the state of being lost in the middle of a forest, with the lost one finding it very difficult to return to where one came from, Pagung said.

The officials and residents of two adjoining towns argued briefly over the exact location of the crash that occurred on April 7—Banguya Township in Banguya, or Barangay Chub in Tuguegarao.

But their dispute ended there. Culture became a unifying thread, particularly for those who took part in the rescue operation and who subsequently complained of bad dreams caused by the sight of the mangled bodies of the dead.

On May 3, the Ibaloi of Kabayan asked their shamans, and five days later, the Kalanguya of Tuguegarao asked for their own shamans.

The two native priests performed the cleansing rituals—called song in Kalanguya and lino in Tuguegarao—to help the rescuers exorcise nightmares, drive away the bad spirits and restore the serenity of the area.

'Gov't beholden to very few who hold RP wealth'

By Dennis Jay Santos

DAWA CITY—THE PHILIPPINES REMAINS IN THE control of oligarchs the government is beholden to them, according to Chief Justice Reynato Sison.

"If you look at the wealth of the country, [you will see that] the control is in the hands of very few people," Sison said on Friday evening at the launch of the Mind Force Movement. Because the government also remains beholden to "those who control the wealth of the nation," a system that can help Filipinos move forward is not possible, said the Chief Justice, who has been campaigning for national moral recovery.

"If you have that kind of predominant, we will never have a healthy democratic system. The rich are very few and the poor are the majority," he said.

Sison named the fundamental problems afflicting the country as "the lack of morality, the weakness of our ethics, the problem of inequitable distribution of wealth, the problem of poverty and the weakness of power and order."

"All these problems [amount to] weakness of values," he said, adding that these were the issues on which the Mind Force Movement was focused.

Sison stressed that the movement was apolitical.

"This movement will not endorse anybody," he said in reference to those

2 poll automation bidders hurdle technical screening

By Kristine L. Alon

THAT CONSIDERED BIDDERS FOR technical screening for the P11.3-billion public information system (PIS) was a hurdle for a third company, even as a third company was disqualified by the Commission on Elections (COMELEC) Special Bids and Awards Committee (SBAC).

Spain's Interim Systems, S.A., which formed a partnership with Strategic Alliance Holdings Inc. and the Interim, and Interim's International, which formed a joint venture with Total Information Management Corp., were disqualified. It was said for the COMELEC to be a competitor for the 2010 presidential and national elections.

The SBAC unanimously disqualified the third company, the consortium of Interim and Strategic Alliance Holdings, for failing to meet the 2010 presidential and national elections.

Palace to solons: Don't rile public

By Ti Nguyen

MALACANANG PRESIDENTIAL Palace lawmakers against ignoring the public over the Commission on Elections (COMELEC) Special Bids and Awards Committee (SBAC) decision to disqualify a bidder.

Presidential Palace Adviser Robert Claudio said Malon would be "nervously nervous."

Claudio said it was "premature" to say anything about the SBAC decision to disqualify a bidder. He said it was "premature" to say anything about the SBAC decision to disqualify a bidder. He said it was "premature" to say anything about the SBAC decision to disqualify a bidder.

Eligible Systems Inc., potential bidder for lack of documents and inappropriate technical papers.

SBAC chair Ferdinand Padilla said the bid panel had yet to open the technical documents of the fourth bidder, 2008 Group of Companies and Interim Systems and Software International, after it ruled that it lacked key certifications. The consortium has a pending motion for reconsideration before the procurement committee.

With the eligibility of at least one competitor to the first stage of the procurement process, the COMELEC has ruled out the specter of a failed bidding for now.

Under the present circumstances, a failed bidding can only be disallowed if the eligible bidder "winning and disqualify another bid" the criteria set by the poll body.

After the technical bid screening, the companies that pass it will be allowed to present their financial documents.

The consortium with the lowest bid will then show the rising and counting machines to the COMELEC and to the public not work, Padilla said.

It will be hoped the company would be able to set up the machines on Monday for the end-to-end demonstration on Tuesday.

"We are seven days delayed at ready but we will make sure it is done the weekend before the end of the month. By June, we will be back on track," he said.

If the machines fail to pass the 2010 election, the company will be asked to pay the cost of the machines.

an indicated Malon over his warning, charging that the COMELEC was "undermining the rights of the public" to prepare for such a scenario.

He had expressed that the bidding process for the P11.3-billion poll automation project would be the Supreme Court to stop the national and local elections on May 11, 2010.

"This could result in a nationwide emergency situation as the bidding process would be the Supreme Court to stop the national and local elections on May 11, 2010."

The COMELEC had disqualified all seven bidders for poll automation, but later granted the appeal of four of them. It is facing similar time in its automation in place, but has been hindered by the unique role of the bidding process.

Presidential Counselor George Remondo said presidential screening Malon of automating the public mind to be a "disaster" was "unintentional."

"They are aggravating the issue of the 2010, as well as the issue of the election and preparation in power by the president as a priority issue to determine the administration and hopefully to enhance their political work, which I think is not appropriate," Remondo said over Manila.

Claudio advised the people to "trust the COMELEC to find a way" to prepare for full automation, saying it has a full year to do so.

2 Pinoys still under A(H1N1) watch; no new cases reported

By Dana Padilla

TWO PERSONS RECOVERED from severe acute respiratory syndrome caused by the influenza A(H1N1) virus are still being evaluated by the Department of Health (DOH) for the deadly flu virus.

The DOH said the two survivors of suspected cases of swine flu in the country reached 37 days May 11 at 14, with no warning signs for the virus.

The two individuals for the two Filipinos are pending. A 26-year-old woman who arrived from the United Kingdom May 15's mother observed to be an uninfected private hospital, while an 88-year-old woman who arrived from South Korea on May 15 was taken to the Research Institute for Tropical Medicine (RITM).

As of May 15, the World Health Organization (WHO) reported that Belgium had reported a confirmed case of influenza A(H1N1), making 34 countries now affected by the new influenza virus.

Japan, India and Turkey previously reported their first respective cases of swine flu (see related story in The World, Page A19).

The WHO said the total number of cases jumped to 7,320 on Friday from 6,467 the previous day, with no new deaths. The number of deaths stands at 63.

While the Philippines is still free from influenza A(H1N1), the DOH reiterates that it will continue to monitor its overall status at airports and the community to catch cases of influenza as it develops early and appropriate control measures implemented immediately. (The DOH said.)

Thailand was the first country to be declared free to report the first confirmed case of swine flu. It now has two confirmed cases.

On Friday, Malaysia became the second country in the region to be hit with one confirmed case. One Saturday, it confirmed a second case.

Malaysia's first (H1N1) patient was a 21-year-old male student who returned from the United States three days ago, said its health ministry.

He arrived in Kuala Lumpur in the morning on a Malaysia Airlines flight from Toronto, New Jersey. The next day, he came down with a fever, sore throat and body aches, and was quarantined in a hospital.

Malaysia confirmed its second case of swine flu on Saturday in a woman who returned from the US on the same flight as the 21-year-old male.

The woman, also a student, arrived Wednesday and was hospitalized Friday in her first pregnancy week. Tests confirmed early Saturday that she was infected with the swine flu virus.

The woman was a friend of the 21-year-old man who was also infected with the virus, and they were on the same flight. Both were in stable condition.

Malaysian authorities are tracking the other 139 passengers and crew who were on the same flight with the two patients.

Indonesia said Friday it was treating a woman suspected of having the H1N1 virus.

The 30-year-old was admitted to a hospital in Bandung on Thursday morning complaining of flu-like symptoms, although they have since subsided, health officials said. With a report from the South

GMA declares May nat'l hypertension month

THE PHILIPPINE SOCIETY OF Hypertension (PSH), together with the Department of Health (DOH), Philippine Heart Association (PHA), Philippine Society of Nephrology (PSN) and Philippine Society of Geriatrics (PSG), will lead today's celebration of World Hypertension Day in the country in state universities to the link between diet and signed Proclamation No. 1764 declaring May of each year National Hypertension Awareness Month," said PSH president Dr. Abner Aguirre.

The proclamation enjoins all government and non-government agencies, such as the DOH and the Department of Social Welfare and Development, to work with the PSH in advocating and implementing activities to prevent and control hypertension and its complications.

Meanwhile, salt intake remains high in the country, with the No. 1 risk factor for cardiovascular disease, the top cause of death worldwide. Reducing daily salt intake by half could save approximately 2.5 million people a year dying from cardiac and heart attacks worldwide. However, said a statement.

In support of World Hypertension Day and in theme of "Salt and High Blood Pressure: Two Silent Killers," the PSH, PHA, PSN and DOH in collaboration with Novartis have launched a low-salt recipe contest.

"The contest aims to increase public awareness of low-salt diet. Filipino dishes could be made delicious and healthy with the minimal use of salt," said Christine T. Llanoc, vice-president affairs and market access director of Novartis.

"The contest that links salt to blood pressure is as strong as that linking cigarette smoking to cancer, heart and kidney disease," said the Llanoc Group, for mer PSH position.

In many instances, the daily salt intake is around 12 grams—more than twice the amount considered necessary by the World Health Organization (WHO).

Research has shown that, in addition to reducing salt intake, changing one's lifestyle to include regular exercise, maintaining a healthy weight and eating healthy food can contribute to preventing high blood pressure and reducing cardiovascular risk, Novartis said.

More information on the celebration of World Hypertension Day and the recipe contest may be found at www.novartis.com.ph. For inquiries, call the PSH hotline at 82117875.

TALK of the TOWN

Taste of tea

Wong Mei Ling
 The Chinese Times

LEGEND HAS IT THAT MORE THAN 4,000 YEARS AGO IN 2,737 B.C., tea was discovered by Chinese Emperor Shennong. Legend by chance. A dead leaf had fallen into his drinking water while he was boiling under a tree.

The next time you sip a cup of tea, think of its health benefits. For example, its antioxidant properties are purported to reduce the risk and progression of cancer, boost the immune system and increase metabolism.

It is amazingly thick and rich in antioxidants. The effect of the tea leaf has been named after the tea (thea) and thea (thea).

Tea drinking soon spread across the country and became a symbol of Chinese high culture, which has spread to other parts of Asia, Europe, the Americas and Russia. However, beyond its social symbol, tea was an important form of medicine used by early physicians.

Since ancient times, the Chinese have been using tea to improve their health and to cure illness. And China's long, traditional Chinese medicine physicians and senior masters at the tea leaf in Singapore.

It is not known when tea was first used for its medicinal value but the earliest records were found in the Han Dynasty (206 B.C. to 220 A.D.).

Today, there are about 1,300 varieties of tea according to the United Kingdom Tea Council. Only the leaves from the same tea plant species of plants are considered tea.

Su mai grass

There are six main grades of Chinese tea—white, green, yellow, oolong, black and pu-erh. Indian and Ceylon tea, like Darjeeling, Orange Pekoe and Earl Grey, are all blends of black tea which are drunk frequently. Black tea is the most popular tea in the world.

Based on the level of fermentation, each has different health benefits. Fermentation is the process of making tea leaves and leaving them to change chemically. This produces enzymes that result in different flavors and colors. The different health benefits of tea have also been attributed to the varying levels of fermentation of the leaves.

Antioxidants

Tea contains naturally occurring chemical compounds called antioxidants. These are antioxidants that may boost the body's immune system, prevent infection and possibly reduce the risk and progression of cancer. Chinese tea also helps stimulate the nervous system, aid digestion, increase metabolism and even improve memory according to China.

However, it is not just Chinese physicians who recognize the medicinal value of tea. In fact, West China Institute professor at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology (HKUST) and laboratory research had shown that the catechins found in green and black tea may prevent the most common progression of cancer.

Both green and black tea extracts have also demonstrated cancer-preventive properties in experimental animal studies," the said, adding, however, that as human population study has been able to show that tea can prevent cancer in humans.

Green and black tea may each present different types of cancer prevention in the tea, but research on the link between dietary habits and longevity and common diseases among whites in Singapore. This includes tea drinking.

A study of 10,000 middle-aged and elderly Chinese living in the Singapore Chinese Health Study conducted by HKUST between 1993 and 2007 showed that women who drank green tea daily had a 30 percent lower risk of breast cancer.

Also, men and women who drank black tea daily had a lower risk of prostate cancer.

This is because of the different levels of fermentation in green and black tea, which leads to major changes in catechins in the tea, thus altering their biological effects, she said.

Referring to the study, Dr. Lee of HKUST said, "This is a very important finding, a cancer risk reduction that is directly linked to tea drinking."

"There is definitely something in tea drinking that is beneficial to health," she said, adding, however, that there was still insufficient evidence to prove the health benefits of tea and it was not yet possible to recommend tea as a preventive measure for cancer.

That is why tea consumption must be for a healthy lifestyle.

"It is not just tea drinking that is good for health, but also a healthy lifestyle," she said, adding, however, that there was still insufficient evidence to prove the health benefits of tea and it was not yet possible to recommend tea as a preventive measure for cancer.

"It is not just tea drinking that is good for health, but also a healthy lifestyle," she said, adding, however, that there was still insufficient evidence to prove the health benefits of tea and it was not yet possible to recommend tea as a preventive measure for cancer.

Drink to your health

If you have a weak stomach and poor digestion, or suffer from green tea or pu-erh tea, avoid it. If you are a regular tea drinker, avoid it.

Tea drinking is a social activity, and the tea leaf is a social symbol. It is not just Chinese physicians who recognize the medicinal value of tea. In fact, West China Institute professor at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology (HKUST) and laboratory research had shown that the catechins found in green and black tea may prevent the most common progression of cancer.

Both green and black tea extracts have also demonstrated

cancer-preventive properties in experimental animal studies," the said, adding, however, that as human population study has been able to show that tea can prevent cancer in humans.

Green and black tea may each present different types of cancer prevention in the tea, but research on the link between dietary habits and longevity and common diseases among whites in Singapore. This includes tea drinking.

A study of 10,000 middle-aged and elderly Chinese living in the Singapore Chinese Health Study conducted by HKUST between 1993 and 2007 showed that women who drank green tea daily had a 30 percent lower risk of breast cancer.

Also, men and women who drank black tea daily had a lower risk of prostate cancer.

This is because of the different levels of fermentation in green and black tea, which leads to major changes in catechins in the tea, thus altering their biological effects, she said.

Referring to the study, Dr. Lee of HKUST said, "This is a very important finding, a cancer risk reduction that is directly linked to tea drinking."

"There is definitely something in tea drinking that is beneficial to health," she said, adding, however, that there was still insufficient evidence to prove the health benefits of tea and it was not yet possible to recommend tea as a preventive measure for cancer.

That is why tea consumption must be for a healthy lifestyle.

"It is not just tea drinking that is good for health, but also a healthy lifestyle," she said, adding, however, that there was still insufficient evidence to prove the health benefits of tea and it was not yet possible to recommend tea as a preventive measure for cancer.

Green tea

It is one of the purest grades of tea because it does not go through the process of fermentation. It is very high in antioxidants that boost the immune system, improve metabolism and may even reduce the risk of lung, colon and skin cancer.

A 2008 study published in the International Journal of Cancer (2008) found that people who drank one to three cups of green tea daily had a 20 percent lower risk of stomach cancer, while those who drank more than three cups had a 45 percent lower risk.

Researchers at the University of Bradford in Britain found that regularly drinking green tea could help prevent osteoporosis, a type of arthritis caused by the breakdown of cartilage.

In addition, green tea is said to help regulate blood sugar levels and prevent varicose and gingivitis (inflammation of the gums).

White tea

The least fermented grade of tea which is why it is very high in antioxidants. It is said to have 10 times the antioxidant power of vitamin E and contains high concentrations of polyphenols and catechins. This helps fight the effects of aging caused by free radicals in the body, reduces the risk of liver, colon and skin cancer, and strengthens the immune system.

Yellow tea

Thanks to its green tea leaf it is left to ferment for 10 days, which gives it a unique flavor.

Like green tea, it has been shown to have health benefits of yellow tea, but according to tea experts, it is not as good as green tea.

Oolong tea

Known as the "old tea," oolong is semi-fermented and known for its weight loss properties. Health reports by Chinese physicians claim that oolong tea, which contains polyphenols, is an effective therapy for people who are obese or who are at risk of obesity.

It is said to have health benefits of oolong tea, but according to tea experts, it is not as good as green tea.

Floral and fruit tea

These are a combination of tea and fruit or flower. It is said to have health benefits of floral and fruit tea, but according to tea experts, it is not as good as green tea.

"Tomorrow we will have rice..."

THERE WAS GOOD NEWS IN the evacuation center on the night of May 12.

"We had good food supply will arrive tomorrow," stated the distribution, a school principal who is himself an evacuee, surrounded in a group of men and women.

Many of them moved from Mindanao to Jolo in order to find a place to stay when they heard the news.

David Rajand, 34, a father of five, was thankful.

"I was filled with hope. My problem has somehow been solved because the supply is coming in. Now, I will be able to replace the rice I lost," he said.

That night, David served a plate of rice to his children.

"Tomorrow we will have rice," he told the children.

The good news only lasted for a night. The following morning, they were told that the food supply was postponed until military operations stop.

"But when will military operations stop?" Rajand asked.

"We have food from such stores," said Rajand. This is a good thing when supply is scarce.

The delay in the arrival of supplies would have meant that the food in the evacuation centers would have been used up.

NOTICE TO PROSPECTIVE SUPPLIERS

There have been cases of suppliers/service providers and contractors who have been victimized by unscrupulous persons claiming to be connected with PAGCOR, and volunteers to arrange papers/ documentary requirements for registration.

Suppliers/service providers/contractors who were victimized have been issued a similar Certificate of Registration, and official receipts allegedly from PAGCOR. These documents were personally delivered to the offices/residences of the applicants. Registration fees were also higher than the prescribed fees set by PAGCOR.

To avoid incidents such as these, we would like to point out some facts and reminders regarding the registration procedure of PAGCOR:

1. Intended suppliers should personally proceed to the Suppliers' Registration and Evaluation Section, Procurement and Property Department to request for a copy of the List of Registration Requirements and Application Forms.
2. PAGCOR does not deliver issued certificates or receipts to the applicant.
3. Registration fees amount to P101,000.00 for initial registration and P10,000.00 for renewal on succeeding years.
4. The supplier will personally make payment of registration to the Cashier's Office.

For your information and guidance.

Marinduque hails SC rule vs Marcopper

MANILA, MARINDUQUE—THE PROVINCE'S OFFICIALS lauded a Supreme Court decision ordering a mining company to pay at least P36 million in taxes to the Marinduque provincial government.

In a decision by the 303rd Civil Division, now retired Associate Justice Ma. Antonia Mito-Quinsac and the Court of Appeals constituted panel of Justices ordered the company to pay at least P36 million in taxes to the Marinduque provincial government.

The SC ruled on a technicality over the use of the land. The company had said it was used as a site for quarrying for pollution control but the SC ruling said the land was used primarily for "petroleum improvement and therefore not a quarry."

Law justice
 According to Justice Mito-Quinsac, environmental commissioner chair of the provincial board, the SC ruling was welcome news that the people of Marinduque had been long waiting for.

"The decision restored our people's confidence in our judicial system and we have great hopes that our sister justice against Marcopper will be justly compensated," Mito-Quinsac said.

"Justice may have come late but for the Marinduqueño people, it will be great to know who brought the great light with us," Calixto Mito-Quinsac, Marinduque's local director representative, said.

Byres, who was formerly the province's governor, added Governor Harry Roque on such

Bishop lashes at return of Abra violence

MANILA CITY—A BISHOP rebuked officials on the sustained violence in Abra after gunmen fired at the home of a reporter of a Church-run newspaper there on Wednesday dawn.

Police are investigating whether the attack on Marjorie Sandagor Trinidad, a reporter of the Ilog was connected to an editorial that criticized the province's only newspaper.

"I was shocked when it came to my attention what happened to one of the editors of the Church-run newspaper," said Bishop Longobillo. "I am a priest, not a politician."

"If this was intentionally done to harm and to silence Marjorie Trinidad in response to one of the issues brought out in the Ilog I the Bishop of Baguio and the whole Church of Abra strongly condemn this very heinous and violent act," he said.

Trinidad said she wrote the editorial questioning some of the newspaper's news being manipulated by a relative of an Ilog official.

She said a 40-year-old bullet was lodged in her leg after the attack. She was taken to Baguio General Hospital.

Teacher-cops trade guns for blackboards

By Marko Reyes

IN THE 1990 ACTION-COMEDY FILM "KINDERGARTEN COP," Hollywood superstar Arnold Schwarzenegger played an undercover policeman who posed as a preschool teacher to gin down a notorious drug dealer.

Schwarzenegger, who portrayed the character of undercover detective John Kimble, showed his frustration from the very start and was against over the introduction of his new role.

In this, the toughest undercover cop early on the basis of his Kindergarten class—as well as those of his more suspicious school teachers—proving that policemen could be doing teachers' work.

Over at Camp Baging Diva in Bataan, Taping City, a new breed of teachers has stepped Schwarzenegger's role by today's exploring their service guns with pens, school books and teacher records.

But for those who serve under Arnold California's premier's teachers, the "Kindergarten" of the National Capital Region Police Office (NCRPO) were not behind as preschool teachers to run other teachers' records.

Kidnap, their primary task was to teach basic reading and writing skills to children in the area.

"We also train our students in good manners and courtesy," said PDI Rina Latorre, one of the law police officers of the "Baby Bull's" of the NCRPO's preschool learning center. "Like any other preschool class, we try to make the lessons more interesting and motivate the children through singing, playing and other activities."

Unlike Schwarzenegger, NCRPO's law volunteers used to teach before they joined the Philippine National Police.

Haven for pre-schoolers

"Baby Bull's" was once a well-known name. Founded by Michael's Foundation, this was a center for children in need, offering low-cost and kindergarten education. It has a library and a small library for the students.

Since 2005, the 30-year-old center has become a haven for pre-school children preparing to enter primary schools, said Police Insp. Rodolfo Jacinto, chief of the NCRPO's Regional Police Community Relations Division.

"Baby Bull's" has been assigned and introduced as a preschool education center by the Taping City government. With the introduction, its graduates can now enroll in any primary school, according to Jacinto.

A small number assigned by the city government helped them develop the curriculum and manage the center in the school.

Apart from regular preschool classes, "Baby Bull's" also holds summer classes for children aged 3 and under.

Jacinto called "Baby Bull's" to be "a haven" and the program started by the NCRPO in 2004 was the brainchild of former NCRPO chief Director Leopoldo Barido, now head of the bureau.

Limited resources

Jacinto said the project was also part of the PNP's Family, Juvenile, Gender and Development programs.

"With our limited resources, we were able to show how the PNP is doing its share to help the government address the lack of school facilities and teachers for pre-school children," Jacinto stressed.

However, Jacinto would still have to perfect their regular duties even if they volunteer pre-school education.

Inspector Lectora Thoma, another policeman-volunteer, said the project proved to be a no-nonsense move in improving the police's image.

She said they were able to help the children of colleagues who live in a housing community inside the camp housed by the volunteers group General Salgado.

The NCRPO also provides free uniforms, books, school materials and feeding programs to the students.

Volunteers of policemen and other students were Camp Baging Diva has also benefited from the program.

SPED Oscar Magallanes, whose 5-year-old daughter Marissa was one of 30 children enrolled in the center, said the project was a big help for ordinary government workers like him.

"If I recall my daughter is another student, I would have spent P1,000 a month to enroll her in a private school," he said.

Another beneficiary of the center is 6-year-old Roy Andara. His mother, Marissa Otero, said she intends to enroll her two youngest children in the center next year.

Bridging the gap

"This project continues to bridge the gap between the police and the community by helping the police closer to the people," Jacinto stressed.

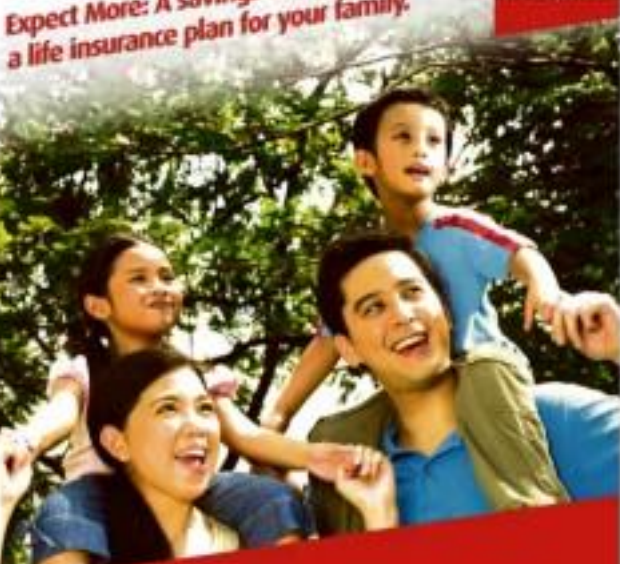

The program also gives the volunteer-turned-policemen an opportunity to go back to their old passion—teaching.

For Jacinto, supervising the learning center was his way of giving back.

"It's a proud product of a day care facility run by the National Police of the Philippines," said the police officer. "My commitment to this program is a matter of showing my gratitude to those who helped me study for this."

In Baler, people take pride in their work

By Juan Comilán

ON THE SPRINKLING GROUNDS OF DREAMS, several hundred heads and a few plastic umbrellas for the rain to fall. Their presence pulled off the rain-making, their presence secured the sky providing a spectacle.

A solar (solarpanel) cooler was also on the hill that morning, sending in the sun.

Using a ladder, he stepped and talked to a double-level air conditioner. The large plastic cups for people, keeping the sunburn cool with spray, it provided just the right amount for the solar panel's heat.

Pride of work is what this owner stands for. He is a Baler, a Baler who is proud of his work. And he is only too happy to go by the name "Boy Tito."

"In Baler, (the solar panel) owner is not just a Baler but also a Baler who is proud of his work. And he is only too happy to go by the name "Boy Tito."

Feeling his fortune

Thirty years ago, Boy Tito and a friend took off from San Lorenzo, Nueva Ecija, and went to Manila to work in a Chinese-owned shoe factory.

Later, Boy Tito sold his shoes to the owner of the factory.

He later found a more profitable field near the Baler road along the coast. In Baler, Nueva Ecija, Boy Tito found his fortune. Producing his "Baler shoes," Boy Tito found how he was able to buy a house and live through hard work.

From making the shoes with the sun on a string on a bamboo pole along with one shoulder, Boy Tito went on to play his trade using a bicycle with a basket.

Now, he owns a modest shop, he said.

"My wife also produced a pharmacy product. She's a Baler who is proud of her work," he said, smiling with pride.

He has seven other sons and daughters, the youngest of whom is in high school.

On the hill that morning, Boy Tito's grandson, Tito, 18, wore through the string of slippers, handing out umbrellas, making payments, and picking up discarded plastic cups, which he properly disposed of in a trash can.

Another proud Balerian is Twister, 35.

He grew up a high-paying job as a general maintenance supervisor at the Republic International Airport in Manila.

How Bert Lozada changed my life

Legendary swimming teacher taught people of all ages—this writer included—how to be safe and happy in the water

BERT LOZADA in his 70s with a toddler student

PERHAPS I AM OVERGROWN, THICK, or perhaps there's no place I would rather be than out in the ocean. I've been a water-dodger for the last 20 years, and my childhood is aching to be a part of the water of the sea, being around friends, diving, and jumping like the wily fish which I have a great respect for all my customers, and am passionate about protecting the marine environment.

I love the water, but very much at home in it, and never laughs up the without it. It's a great alternative way.

I remember two summers when I thought about taking a job. I was about 16, and my brother, who was carrying me to a swimming pool to swim over my head, started fighting over me—and proceeded to drag the child of his brother. I remember my mother's reaction, and how I thought I would just cut before I was badly shocked one. I had experienced being underwater for months.

Another time, in a second-grade classroom, swimming party in a swimming club, then girls learned how about bringing us to the side of the pool. When our girlfriends came home, I jumped up and had a lot of water in the pool. I was a little bit of a water baby. I remember back to the games I was a little bit of a water baby.

Scand

I was 11 when my parents decided to enroll me in swimming lessons at what used to be the New Health Club in White Plains. I had by then been to about the world of swimming, and more than had an indoor pool, the small one in the garden of our house.

On the first day of class our instructor announced, I was one of only two girls and boys, but all of the other kids were younger than to discover the beauty of our country. From sun to beach, we have an incredible range of options and thanks to QOV's "Theme Hills," which has been inspiring vacation lovers, I have had the chance to see so many summer options.

Baguio is the quintessential summer location. The weather is pleasant and nothing beats pine-scented, fresh air. The location and the scenic views, whether in Mines
Travel Park or in the market.

An outstanding new feature is the recently opened Baguio Museum (bagoi.museum.ph) along EDSA Road. The museum's modern structure houses a vast collection of Cordillera artifacts, masks from several indigenous tribes, and the art of the Cordillera locals.

But for kids is a special section called Bagoi Gallery, where art is an expression of how we view our beautiful home.
Other parts of the gallery include a craft and toy forest area, the gift shop where I bought books for Bagoi magazine.

The adjacent lake and garden area have different fountains—Jaba, Benguet, Bagoi, Lalagan and Bagoi...that are the crown. One day experience living the traditional la-gon area with the children of modern day parents, like a chance with hot water.

The panoramic view from the Museum enjoys from the mountains to the South China Sea. In his spare time, Bagoi's creative talent lives alongside the fun found in some home and Bagoi is so lucky to have him.

One way to Baguio was once special and we checked in Hotel Elizabeth last week. Bagoi is also available on call 874-

'Manila is textured with history, then suddenly you see these globes that look like 3-D anime'

Indomito. There were no more big luxury out there that came from the city's elite.

It's an echo and a warning because the design is out of context. On one way it reminds of a wedding scene, not some these lamps. Manila is textured with history, then suddenly you see these globes that look like 3-D anime or some that look like such designs. It's a vibrant thing.

Christian Espino, designer. They're too busy out there. He's a designer, designer. They are already too busy with not enough of these to light up the scene. They are overly designed which is a Filipino thing—putting more than what's needed.

Alfreda Cordero, exhibited. It's subjective. What I feel beautiful, others may not. They're not up to but they can be better designed. Some would design to make a little history and be more Filipino. Others would make it Filipino but modern, but the lamps are full of history because that's our culture.

In Taguig, the lamps look like they belong in Bushwood Kingdom. Maybe it's for the country. But the idea that they called your attention already says that it's different—whether you like it or not.

Clara Tugay, artist and exhibitor.

The lamps look like these cheap-looking, contemporary is a low-budget and it's more. They're an artistic, in-between. The idea of lighting the promenade is a great idea, but in promenade should have been more sensitive to the historical aspect of the boulevard, from Malabon to Rizal Park. It was the 1960s. From the 1960s to the present, it's a story of the personal history of our life as a nation.

Rosario Escamero-Escamero, exhibited.

They don't resemble modern or enhance the city. We had when you find out a lamp costs P100,000 each, when the actual price is only one-fifth of that, these lamps look so if these friends pulled the whole city in pink and blue. Aesthetic is also a function. Something justifying the price itself.

Take a look at those buildings. Instead of enjoying the sunset, you see a row of traffic. If only we had good artists who could come up with a brilliant design rather than seeing these plastic balloons. There has to be

Some exhibiting with the layers. Showing different city exhibits.

Starline on Boracay

Philippines. It's not about tourism in Boracay anymore. That's how popular this destination is. It's a conclusion is the unplanned growth of this smaller town evident than in its expanded, design airport which has now become an island for visitors. Nothing could spoil a few vacation more than being stranded in a local airport where your flight is delayed, or even cancelled.

Building up local tourism destinations becomes almost like it demands an island to be an island and a port.

Boracay, Cebu, Bohol, Palawan now have a growing number of high-end, mid-range, and flying in those places is far from being a cup-of-cha tea experience.

It's destination

Sell on Boracay. Boracay is clearly the 'it' destination these days.

Peak after peak, the newly opened resort area gets in a lot of visitors.

Hope, Fred Pin and Angelina Jade really didn't show up. But starter local VIP did, with an old lady here.

Confessions of an accidental celebrity stalker

By Pam Potter

IT STARTED ON DAY ONE. I WAS falling for a mall owner in Los Angeles with ER and her brother. Just when we considered upon an area that had been considered off. There were signs all over it. "Quiet please. Filming going on." The area had been previously considered by Christmas. There was a sign: Christmas balls and giant tube pit-bosses with giant blue bows.

The filming was for TV which shows the crew didn't say the word at the young actor, trying to figure out who it was. "Is that Star Trek?" I said.

"That's it, one of the Star Trek hosts," I said.

There was a blonde girl wearing a skin suit and boots to the middle of the set. She had her back to us but that didn't stop us from trying to guess who she was. "Is it Harry Potter?" one shouted. I kept smiling as I could get a look at her face.

"It's definitely not Harry Potter," I said as I walked back. We decided to leave the area before it got too hot.

That was the first of what became a series of brushes with celebrities during a crazy three-week trip to the land of the stars.

Harry Potter on Broadway

A few days later, we were in New York, trying to walk back to the subway when a change of people looked our way. They were hanging around outside a Broadway theater, cameras ready. The air was buzzing with their excitement and anticipation. I looked across the street and saw some more people there.

"Who are you waiting for?" a lady's voice asked.

"David Beckham?" another lady's voice asked.

Apparently, the "Harry Potter" set, who has a big role in the Broadway play "Ragtime," was about to leave the theater. We thought about waiting so we could see him but our waiting time inflated. At that point, not even David Beckham would have been powerful enough to make us stop.

Hitting the jackpot at Universal Studios

We thought we hit the jackpot when we saw that "Dragonheart" star was filming the day we were to enter all Studios. He took deep breaths as the public-attention-seeking actor was worked. When the film the set was almost done and didn't get us in a single amount of time that's what it took.

Later that afternoon, we searched the land show of "Warriorship" at the theme park. As we walked on, I noticed around the perimeter of the set. "Look, some of them have been on 'CSI.'" But we couldn't recognize any of them. Luckily, it wasn't the last half of the day for the "CSI" film in its.

The same evening at a Chinese restaurant in Orlando when Jay said that there was filming going on a few yards away from the exit. "Is the actor here?" I said. "It's Yvonne," he said.

Since we were standing in line at the filming location, Jay had played a joke on us. Yvonne Morgan was nowhere in sight. I kept waiting the crowd moving around. I tried to find her but none. I saw some of the crew and some women walking in the middle of the scene. The men had their grey hair while the women had beautiful blonde hair. I recognized that blonde hair.

"Oh, my god, it's Orlando and Collette Williams from 'CSI: Las Vegas'!" I said before walking to them.

But they didn't seem as excited as I was. As I ran back to the set person I was sure would be involved with the crew, who—Ph! who is also a huge fan of the show.

Forget the brave and the free, America is the land of celebrity encounters

Pinning Gisele on

When I got there, she was on the phone with her boyfriend, telling him that Gisele was right in front of us. When she ended the call, we tried to figure out if moving into the middle of the scene to become surprise stars would be worth the same excitement. Most cases we were there out of the place.

I heard someone say "Who realizes that show anyone?" and noticed the urge to swing his stick. If he doesn't know who the mistress killer is, it's his big day.

We managed to find a perfect spot right behind the main TV camera. I stood there with her and a bunch of other fans, happily taking photos as William Bowers and Wang Pengfei walked around us. This was the first time we had to be so close to our idol's photograph.

But another's head was off. At this point, they had seen the same several times but none of them—our arrival, saw the crew—started smiling with it. William Bowers seemed to be looking his pictures. Each time he walked toward the crew to discuss the scene, he eyed the camera man. Finally, he noticed toward the camera, complaining about them.

And just like that, black pictures were put up. Looking over the view he walked away, abandoning hopes of having photographs with them. Great, just great. Our biggest celebrity encounter yet and we came up to pin the guy off.

Crashing the red carpet

I was already in the US when I heard the good news that I had a shot to interview someone (Gisele) and found Gisele about three years later. "Study of her," but I'll have to watch the movie first at a screening, in Miami/Chicago there is Hollywood the day before the interview.

Hours before the screening, my friends and I passed by the theater and saw that the place was being prepared for the event. "Where, I didn't know it was going to be a red carpet thing," I said. "But that's from Charlie is it?" That's when I have to be caught.

But they were shocked. "If that's where you're supposed to be, why are there huge posters of 'The Express' all over the place?"

"The Express" is a very different movie from "Body of Lies." Football players vs. cops. Thanks Gisele to Leonardo DiCaprio.

"I don't know," I said. "Maybe they're trying to show someone off." After the set had set, the scene was such the DiCaprio Thanks was completely different. There were bright lights, a lot of photographers and even some fans crowded around the red carpet and looking on from across the street, trying to get a glimpse of the actor.

I ran up to a rough-looking security guy and said, "Excuse me, I'm supposed to be in there for press check-in." "You're right," he said. "Security guy #1 said to me exactly that. Wait a minute, I saw right on time, I changed it off. He said our way around the back but he saw our way here and he had to go through the front entrance. I did and Security guy #1 finally worked us through."

Deirdre Quaid's family

I found a guy holding a video as the press check-in table. The press is already on the red carpet. "Good, spending it to help me look like the movie's position."

Before I knew what was happening, I was standing on the red carpet. On the red carpet, with the actors, we behind the backs of the rest of the press was I looked up and saw that I was surrounded by Atlanta interviewers. Oh, oh, I thought with actors. There are no Atlanta interviewers around "Body of Lies".

Then, I heard one of the security guys speak into his radio. "Security Guard! Security here!"

Help, help! I was in the wrong area. Finally, it was Security Guy #1 who ended up helping me find my way. I guided my people and I took out an inside the dark theater where I had an entire row to myself. All thoughts of "The Express" left my mind as I entered a world of lights, cameras and a lot of screams.

Face-to-face, finally

The next day, I came face-to-face with Leonardo DiCaprio and Leonardo DiCaprio. DiCaprio DiCaprio was relaxed and happy—except for that bad moment after a journalist from People asked him if he was an angry man. That wasn't a very smart thing to do.

I used up most of my energy that day waiting the sign to ask Leonardo DiCaprio the same question I should not ask him. "I mean to you to thank you—why didn't you write me back?"

But he had his own important question. Fifteen years after that time in my life I spent trying out pages of Boy and trying to decide if I should risk his phone on my wife's laptop. I said to me DiCaprio. I heard DiCaprio was finally meeting a few last away from me. And the first words out of his mouth were, "Can I see the book, please?"

And that was the end of what could have been a great Hollywood moment.

'Keep life simple—and keep a few friends'

Your grandpa is still unbelievably conservative, but I have learned to respect your mothers' choices, their beliefs, their ways of life

By Philo A. Evenson
Contributor

DEAR EMBARRASSED KEN, as I write this, I am listening to Jack's Perfect 10, 3, and in general, unpredictable, poignant mood about me to reflect and express my thoughts as a 44-year-old grandfather.

I decided to think that your decade is the best time to be born in. The world is threatened by the effects of climate change and you will never know when Big Momma here and abroad are having the same time of their lives.

Indeed, the economy is bad worldwide, but who cares? We enjoyed watching "Young in Manila" together and I think your interest in the last thing that has happened in my life.

But you have to know where you stand.

I became a father at 27 and what followed were years your mothers were educated and raised in under different circumstances.

Now, your mothers were through their elementary and secondary levels in the public schools, and was an early achiever like your first mother from Grade 1 to 4, and the graduated high school from the biggest high school in the world (St. Ignace High School).

She was a college scholar and graduated from the University of the Philippines, and finished her master's degree in the same school.

She taught, on top of other assorted jobs outside the classroom. Yes, this was your mother's choice.

Harrowing years

Indeed, your mother went through more or less the same schooling, getting various honors, but skipped third. High school as far as Philippine High School for this was in Mt. Makiling, near in Cebu City.

She walked barefoot in the stage to get her medal at ceremonies and delivered a poem instead of a salutatory address, which impressed the graduation speaker, even in Boston, New York.

She proceeded to University of the Philippines, worked at the College, and, just a couple of years before graduation, disappeared. She was soon found in the jungles of Bataan, dying in an unmarked

How Hugh Jackman got that perfect 'Wolverine' body

LOS ANGELES—EATING CHICKEN EVERY two hours helped Hugh Jackman achieve the body he shows off in "X-Men Origins: Wolverine."

Wearing a black polo shirt that barely hid his impressive biceps during an interview in the 2006 Golden Globes, Jackman revealed with a laugh that his diet from his chicken diet was not chicken. He quipped that when he heard on the radio that eating daily chocolate is associated with heart health, he quickly turned off the radio. "That's all I needed to hear!" he exclaimed.

All that chicken and body training have paid off for Hugh—"Wolverine" has opened almost $200 million in 10 days.

Can you talk about the workout that you had to help you achieve the perfect body in this movie? How did the diet affect your mood? What was the most challenging part of the diet? What was the most rewarding part of the diet?

Well, probably you should ask Deb. The thing I love and about whatever body you're trying to achieve is that it's 70 percent diet and 30 percent training. I always thought it was the other way around. We've got to train hard and eat hard. But now I think a lot of people have caught up with this. Most sports teams have a nutritionist on board. I've done others who you see and it affects how you look at certain moments. It's a time-consuming and it's business. There's a period of putting on muscle where you're also put on fat. There's actually no way around it. If you look at bodybuilders, there's a period where they kind of look big and muscular but a little bit soft, a little round.

And that about three months before they go for a competition, they will concentrate on stripping down the fat because they use those subcutaneous built muscle and lose fat. It's all crap. Obviously, that's impossible for the body to do. So you have to do both together. The trainer is losing the fat while not losing the muscle mass. In the building of the muscle phase, I was eating on muscle like basically raw chicken breasts with another separate plate of steamed vegetables. Two hours later, another plate would come to me. That it would take me 45 or 50 minutes to eat it because it was just so... I always had a plate of banana on hand.

Everyone was kind of laughing at me. My body was actually dropping. I was almost depressed. I felt like I was the river, really. But there was a moment in the past of it eating regularly but eating less, eating less, my energy level was coming back. I mean, I could sleep five hours a night and wake up like, "Let's go!" I couldn't wait to train. It was amazing. Now, I've adapted that style

Robin Williams jokes about his heart surgery

NEW YORK—ROBIN WILLIAMS, who had heart surgery eight weeks ago, says he and TV talk show host David Letterman "are now best buddies of the upper echelon."

Williams, appearing on CBS' "Late Show with David Letterman," was joking to Letterman's surprise before heart surgery in 2000.

The 57-year-old actor joked, "I have a new ruler and a square. I don't expect a new wife, which is great, and the green's been lit."

DAVID Cook and DAVID Archuleta perform on stage.

What not to ask the 2 Davids

MIXED PEOPLE who attended the press conference of kids David Cook and David Archuleta were given instructions not to ask three questions.

The officials were instructed: (1) the more death of Goliath issue, (2) Archuleta's induction for best kid Right to Recovery, and (3) women's clothing (Archuleta's pants).

None dared.

How gay Archie?

To be fair, Archuleta is a sick a little guy. From TV Host who answered him, he said you wouldn't have the heart to ask to reveal questions.

Archuleta is a dancer, this said. Or so Cook would describe Archie. This was one of the most popular people I have.

When Archuleta stepped on "So Free" from his album, including the show's hosts, asked for a question exchange, Cook:

In return, the hosts gift Archuleta with a sewing machine, as well as a sewing kit, and a sewing machine.

The last answer up and the last ones prepared on the stage and would be to ask him to look back.

How blood?

And that was it.

A mixed crowd, others that make longer line today, but I am confused, with whom he favored one over the other.

My last friend from today, the daughter of a fighter who was once married to a boxer.

It's unclear, however, if he also has a line blood to her name.

Do you dare

While Archuleta would risk life and limb for a puppy, she is not. Cook said he would gladly go to his death.

Archuleta himself is very close to his puppy, saying "I'm sure the puppy, he said, 'I'm sure the puppy, I had two puppies for the last time.'"

"You must love of puppies, too," Cook said the hosts of "So Free" the same "Wag" on May 13, just like he did the day before, raised quite a commotion.

Of the day and from Cook said, "I'm sure."
